TRISKAIDEKAPHOBIA

1 The number 13 is synonymous with bad luck. It's considered unlucky to have 13 guests at a dinner party, 2 and most people avoid getting married or buying a house on a day marked by this dreaded number. Especially 3 superstitious folks even avoid driving on Friday the 13th. Our fixation with the number 13 runs deep. Of course, 4 unlucky 13 isn't the only popular superstition that has been linked to the human psyche for decades. We're also 5 beholden to black cats, broken mirrors and umbrellas opened indoors.

6 Author and psychology professor Stuart Vyse explains that the number 13 has a history of very old
7 references that tend to be associated with groups of 13 people. "At the Last Supper in Christian theology, there were 8 13 dinner guests, so that number is unlucky because Christ was betrayed... And in Norse mythology, 12 benevolent 9 gods were gathering in a hall and the evil god Loki, the 13th guest, attacked the group and the god Balder was 10 killed".

11 Although there isn't any statistical proof to support the superstition that Friday the 13th — or even just the 12 number 13 itself — is unlucky, the fear of the number 13 is so pervasive that it even has a phobia named after it:
13 triskaidekaphobia. Based on this phobia, airlines typically do not have a 13th row, and most tall buildings do not have 14 a 13th floor. However, many triskaidekaphobics, who count author Stephen King and former president Franklin
15 Roosevelt among their ranks, don't need statistical evidence to back up their conviction that the number is truly
